RESTRICTION

Restriction to one of the following inventions is required under 35 U.S.C. 121:

- I. Claims 1-7, drawn to a method of dissipating electrical power in a fuel cell power system, classified in class 429, subclass 13.
- II. Claims 8-17, drawn to a method for dissipating electrical power in a vehicle, classified in class 180, subclass 54.1.
- III. Claims 18-22, drawn to a fuel cell powered vehicle, classified in class 180, subclass 69.6.

The inventions are distinct, each from the other because of the following reasons:

Inventions I and II are related as mutually exclusive species in an intermediate-final product relationship. Distinctness is proven for claims in this relationship if the intermediate product is useful to make other than the final product (MPEP § 806.04(b), 3rd paragraph), and the species are patentably distinct (MPEP § 806.04(h)). In the instant case, the intermediate product is deemed to be useful as a method of dissipating energy in a fuel cell and the inventions are deemed patentably distinct since there is nothing on this record to show them to be obvious variants. Should applicant traverse on the ground that the species are not patentably distinct, applicant should submit evidence or identify such evidence now of record showing the species to be obvious variants or clearly admit on the record that this is the case. In either instance, if the examiner finds one of the inventions anticipated by the prior art, the evidence or admission may be used in a rejection under 35 U.S.C. 103(a) of the other invention. In the instant case, the final product has a different mode of operation as the method for dissipating electrical power in a vehicle includes a regenerative braking system for converting kinetic energy into electrical energy and using the kinetic energy to power the vehicle. The method of dissipating electrical power in a fuel cell power system does not include a regenerative braking system for converting kinetic energy into electrical energy. The intermediate product is deemed to be useful as a method of dissipating energy in a fuel cell that is used to power a building. The building does not require a regenerative braking system.

Inventions III and II/I are related as product and process of use. The inventions can be shown to be distinct if either or both of the following can be shown: (1) the process for using the product as claimed can be practiced with another materially different product or (2) the product as claimed can be used in a materially different process of using that product (MPEP § 806.05(h)). In the instant case, the product as claimed can be used in a materially different process of using that product such as using the vehicle to transport materials. The process for using the product as claimed can be practiced with another materially different product such as a fuel cell powering a building.

Because these inventions are distinct for the reasons given above and have acquired a separate status in the art as shown by their different classification, restriction for examination purposes as indicated is proper. Because these inventions are distinct for the reasons given above and have acquired a separate status in the art because of their recognized divergent subject matter, restriction for examination purposes as indicated is proper.

Because these inventions are distinct for the reasons given above and the search required for Group I is not required for Group II or III, restriction for examination purposes as indicated is proper. Because these inventions are distinct for the reasons given above and the search required for Group II is not required for Group III, restriction for examination purposes as indicated is proper. Applicant is advised that the reply to this requirement to be complete must include an election of the invention to be examined even though the requirement be traversed (37 CFR 1.143).
